SPECIAL NEEDS CLASS- Piano/Voice/Music Appreciation

This class is for someone who has challenges in life, but has a love for music. There is a vast range in special needs. For some, a quiet atmosphere, free of the distractions that come with group classes, is needed. For others, a slower pace or a class that caters to the individual's strengths, is helpful. And still for some, a patient teacher, driven to connect and willing to be creative, trying different methods, is what is needed.

Tradewind Studios will provide all of these things for every student.

We aim to make each class unique, to best serve the needs at hand, and to impart the knowledge and beauty of music. Music is healing, and provides such joy. It is calming too, and can provide an outlet of expression that is not only therapeutic, but can connect the heart and the brain, like nothing else.

Depending on the need, we will observe and endeavor to connect with each student in a way that works best. For this reason, each class will be different, for each student will be different. For some, learning how to play an instrument, sing and create will be an adequate goal. For others, creating an atmosphere for music appreciation and opportunities for expression will be our goal.

Working closely with the parent or caregiver, will be an important part of this class, as they are the expert in their experience with the child/student. It will be helpful to know what excites the student, interests them, provokes frustration, and what are the major challenges. Knowing these things, will help us create a class, where we can be most successful in our lessons.

Please feel free to contact us about any question, concerns or information you would like us to have to better prepare us, for these classes.

Aimee Perry is co-owner of Tradewind Studios, and the instructor for these classes.
